

ABSTRACT

A lithographic dampening control system measures the color strength of various tones of ink printed in multiple lateral locations across the width of a printing press to determine optimum dampening and controls multiple dampening control devices. By measuring and correcting
5 for excess or inadequate dampening solution, proper dampening is maintained despite variations such as increased evaporation at machine edges due to heat from bearing friction.